

questioned if the Council was meant to focus more on the rationale and calendar description or the outline.

- R Huxtable explained that the role of the outline was meant to be an example of what was to come and is not necessarily the set outline. He advised that the Council look more to the calendar description as he would hate to see any proposal denied for the detail and quality of the outline. He agreed that the outline presented was a poor model in terms of academic representation.

- C Newitt asked if there was non-arbitrary criteria for which courses met the lab science requirements and which did not. R Huxtable noted that there was consultation with the science department, but there was a question as to whether their voice was more than advisory. The geography department did not see this as
